A Child Will Eat Only As Much As A Child Will Eat

'You've probably heard this before: A child will eat only as much as a child will eat. But how many times have you kept it in mind while planning meals or feeding your child? Doctors and child nutrition experts have given some important pointers listed below along with some handy tips from parents:

- A baby's empty stomach is only as big as the baby's fist
- No baby will starve himself/ herself
- Feeding patterns change on a daily basis
- Food requirement changes with age
- Have a schedule for meals

The key is packing nutrition in a small quantity. After all, if children are good things that come in small packages – so should their meals!
